Enel Américas included in new S&P Dow Jones sustainable index

Santiago, January 20, 2021. Enel Américas has been included in the new sustainable S&P Dow Jones index, presented this morning by the Santiago Stock Exchange and S&P Dow Jones indexes. The S&P IPSA ESG Tilted index follows selection criteria based on rules that are based on ESG principles (environmental, social, and governance) in order to select and weigh the components, coming from the S&P IPSA, the main stock market indicator in Chile, and thus measure the performance of some of the largest and most liquid stocks listed on the Santiago Stock Exchange.

"We value the recognition that sustainability is an intrinsic part of our business. Our operations and investment decisions are inspired by the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals, with a special emphasis on emission-free generation and more efficient energy solutions, which promote more sustainable energy models," indicated Maurizio Bezzeccheri, CEO of Enel Américas

In turn, the company's CFO, Aurelio Bustilho, commented that "this is one more sign that we are progressing on the right path. The incorporation of Enel Américas in this new index will translate into greater attractiveness for investors seeking exposure to companies that have ESG principles at the center of their business."
